PREFACE.

SECTION I. PREFATORY.

THIS volume contains nothing more than a long list of men's names, each name under the township in which the man had his taxable property and followed by the amount of tax that he had to pay. Nothing more than that. And yet it seems to me to contain a large amount of raw material for the medieval history of Suffolk, and I cannot but marvel that we should have crossed the threshold of the twentieth century before any one had taken the trouble to print it. Of course what is here printed had often been consulted in manuscript, and a bit here and a bit there nibbled off. But things lying in manuscript do not tell the tale that lies told within them, nor does nibbling get it out of them. Before that tale can be fully told, one must have the whole thing in such a compact and legible form as only the printer can give, with the addition of that still compacter form which only an index can give. Here in this volume we have, I hope, those two things needful with no more inaccuracy than must be expected.

A bare list of men's names in the twelfth or thirteenth century tells a great deal more than a bare list in the seventeenth century. In the one the names are descriptive and have a still living meaning, in the other that description no longer describes and that meaning no longer lives, or at least its life is only fossil life. In the one the names are names and descriptions, in the other the names are names and nothing more. For instance, in the early list John Smith would be John Smith because he was daily smiting in a forge; in the later list he might be John Smith without your being able to say what he did every day; all it tells you is that he had an ancestor who smote hundreds of years ago.

So the early list not only names the men but it sometimes portrays them and tells you something about them. It tells also of places, it tells of objects, natural or artificial, in those places, interesting if they are still there, equally interesting if they are clean gone. It throws light on the language by containing words for which there is scarce any other authority. I note that there are words in the list of names here printed for which the great historical English dictionary now in progress gives no instance so early; and I daresay a careful search might discover herein some words for which it has found no authority at all. In fact an early list of names ought to be treated like an early poem or chronicle and edited by those who have made the language their special study. But if they wont others must.

In the early fourteenth century list which is printed in this volume the names are in a transitional state. In many of them the description of a man still describes him, in some of them it no longer does so. In many of them the meaning of the name is still a living meaning, in some of them it has begun to be rather a fossil. Some of the John Smiths are still smiting, some of them are doing something else. William Vissdelu who heads the list need not himself have had the face of a wolf. I will give proofs of this transitional state presently. But at any rate the list is full of information and interest from whatever point of view you look at it, linguistic, historic, topographical, genealogical, etc.

This preface has no intention of trying to work up the raw material herein contained into all the articles which might be manufactured out of it. That work belongs to other volumes and other departments of labour. But it may reasonably be expected to point out a few things, both generally as to taxation at this time, and particularly as to these Suffolk taxpayers.

SECTION II. GENERAL. METHOD OF TAXATION.*

Bishop Stubbs says that under the Norman kings all taxation, as far as we know, was raised on land according to computation by the hide. But the reforms of Henry II, 1154—1189, developed the material wealth of the country, so that revenue was increased by taxation being transferred from land to moveables, such as cattle and crops in the country, money and stock-in-trade in the boroughs.

In A.D. 1188 the second crusade was undertaken to expel Saladin from Jerusalem. Henry II himself took the cross, and the nation granted a tenth of the value of rents and moveables to be paid by all excepting crusaders. Certain moveables were excepted from the tax: viz. the arms, horses and clothing of knights, the horses, books and clothing of the clergy with their vestments and church furniture, and the jewels of both clergy and laity.

This method of taxation by granting a fraction of the value of rents and moveables, which was now, A.D. 1188, first introduced, continued in use for about one hundred and fifty years, viz. till A.D. 1334, when a change was made which does not concern us in this volume. The fraction granted during those one hundred and fifty years ranged from a fortieth to a fourth. The fourth, an exceptionally large grant, was for the ransom of king Richard in 1193. The fraction that this volume deals with was a twentieth. Sometimes the grant was on the value of rents and moveables, sometimes of rents only, sometimes of moveables only. Different moveables at different times were excepted from taxation.

At first everybody seems to have assessed himself and brought what he thought was his share to the representatives of the king and the church, who had the right of making further inquiry if they thought he had not brought enough. But later on, and at the time that we are concerned with, the manner of assessing and collecting was as follows :—

A writ was issued for each county, addressed to the knights, freemen and whole community thereof. This writ recited the grant which had been made and the appointment of two knights in each county as Commissioners to assess and collect it. These Commissioners were to cause to be selected from each township two freemen, or more according to the size of the township, who were to take an oath faithfully to assess all goods. All the goods of clergy as well as of laity, if not annexed to their churches, were to be included in the assessment. The Commissioners were to go from hundred to hundred and township to township, to see if the assessments were correct and to report to the Exchequer the names of those who had sworn falsely. A schedule of the assessment was to be made in duplicate, containing the names of those taxed and the amounts with which they were charged. One copy of this schedule was to be kept by the Commissioners, and the other was to be sent to the Exchequer.

SECTION III. THE TAX OF 1327.

Now leaving generals we come to particulars, and look at one particular year. In January, 1327, the unfortunate Edward II was deposed and imprisoned, and in the following September he was murdered. The summer of 1327 was occupied in a not very successful war with Scotland, the boy-king, Edward III, being at the head of the army. This war had to be paid for, and a parliament held at Lincoln in the autumn granted a twentieth on moveables. The writ for collecting this twentieth was dated November 23, 1327.

I ought properly to have had the original ordinance for this grant transcribed and printed. I believe it exists among the Public Records. But it is probably horribly long, horribly intricate, written in Norman French and with many abbreviations, a combination of horrors from which I have shrunk. However, though it might have settled a few doubtful points, yet we can get on fairly well without it.

SECTION IV. TAX PAYERS OF SUFFOLK IN 1327.

Next we look at not merely one particular year, but one particular county, viz. Suffolk.

We have seen that two Commissioners were appointed for each county. The two Commissioners for Suffolk were John de Welnetham and John de Tendring. Neither of them appear among those who paid the tax. Some of their name and (I suppose) kinsfolk do, but not they. I can only guess that possibly they were exempt from paying as a recompense for their trouble.

We have seen that the two Commissioners had to appoint at least two freemen for each township to make the assessment and collect the money in their township. In the Hundred of Samford and sometimes in the Hundred of Bosmere the names of these two freemen are given at the end of the list for each township. But in the other Hundreds they are not given.

We have seen that the two Commissioners in each county were ordered to have two copies made of the schedule of the assessment, keeping one copy themselves and handing over the other to the Exchequer. From the statement written at the end of the schedule, which I have printed at p. 222, we learn that the two Commissioners for Suffolk delivered the rolls containing the schedule to the Exchequer with their own hands (per manus suos) on May 5, 1329. These very identical rolls, which they handled in their hands close upon six hundred years ago, are now in a perfect state of preservation in the Public Record Office, and I have handled them with my hands, and anybody can handle them with their hands. I have had them transcribed, and their contents are the contents of this volume. The transcript was made for me by Mr. J. J. Muskett with his usual care and patience. The other copy of the schedule should be among the county documents, but probably it has not survived.

This volume, then, contains the names of all in the county of Suffolk, who in the year 1327 paid their twentieth of the value of their moveable goods. It includes men whose sons, if not themselves, were to fight at Crecy and Poitiers a few years later. I presume that we have here the name of every householder of the wealthy class, every householder of the middle class, and a certain proportion of the poorest class. Not all of the poorest class, because they who had not taxable goods to the value of five shillings were excepted. There were no crusaders now to be excepted, for the crusades were over. But there may have been some other exceptions. Not having got the actual ordinance before one, one cannot tell. How far the clergy come in I am not quite sure. We have the names of all these Suffolk people village by village, so that we can tell where they lived or had their property; and we have the amount that they had to pay, so that we can tell how rich or how poor they were. Having such a complete list one naturally looks into it and asks a few questions.

One question is, How many persons are there, and what light does the list throw on the population of the county and of its component parts?

In the lists as printed I count 11,720 entries. In the index I count about 9,150 different names. The number of entries is greater than the number of different persons, because a man who has property in more than one township is entered more than once, being always entered under each township where his goods are. The number of different names in the index is less than the number of different persons, for one name often represents several different persons. So that the number of persons must lie somewhere between 11,720 and 9,150. It is probably not far from 11,000. Supposing them to be all householders, we must multiply the number by (say) 5 to bring in the other members of the household, and we must add so many hundreds to bring in the excepted poor, and then we shall have the population of the county. A comparison of the number of people in any township as shown here with the number of people in that township as shown in the poll tax return of 1381 would help one to calculate how many must be added. But we must remember that midway between 1327 and 1381 came the Black Death, whereby whole families, if not whole villages, were swept away. The Suffolk poll tax return has been printed by Mr. Edgar Powell in his history of the Rising in East Anglia in 1381.

The total amount which these 11,000 payers paid is put down as £1082 17 0 $\frac{3}{4}$. The tax being a twentieth this represents taxable property of the value of about £21,650. This taxable property includes all the produce of the land, cattle and crops, rents and ready money, and the goods of merchants and tradesmen. Apparently it does not include all church property.

Without going very closely into the matter I may say that the largest payers in the country townships rarely get up to £3. Edmund de Pakenham in six townships pays a total of 62 shillings. Hervey de Stanton in six townships pays 57 shillings. The Earl Marshall in nine townships pays 54 shillings. I do not think any one else pays as much as these, and there may be about twelve persons paying between 40 and 50 shillings. I think the largest sum paid by one individual in one township is 27 shillings. I don't think there are a dozen individual payments of over 20 shillings in one township, and perhaps not over fifty of 10 shillings. These large payments are mostly in West Suffolk. The smallest payment is 6 pence.

The four boroughs are kept distinct from the rural hundreds and come at the end. At Bury St. Edmunds the two largest payers pay 10 shillings each. One of them apparently occupied one of the five gates of the town, viz. Richard in Porta. But at Ipswich we have a real millionaire, viz. John de Whatfield, who pays £5 3s. 3d. Nobody else in town or country comes anywhere near him. One wonders what was the nature of his moveables. Besides that he pays 24 shillings in four country townships.

There are signs of different ways of assessment in different townships; e.g. in Helmingham, Mildenhall, etc. you have odd half pence and farthings after nearly every name; at Trimley etc. the amounts are delightfully squared.

I may say as a proof of the accuracy of my transcript, as far as the figures go, that I have added up the totals of each township, and in nearly every case do they agree with the total as given in the rolls. In the very few cases where they don't quite agree I have added my total within square brackets. This shows that at any rate the figures are correctly transcribed. I have not added up the totals of the townships to see whether the totals of the Hundred are correct, having had arithmetic enough in adding up the townships. But the grand total comes right within a pound or two, which is not much in a matter of over £1,000.

The following table will show the relative wealth and population of the different hundreds and boroughs.

Another question is, How are these 11000 persons made up?

There are barons and members of baronial families ; knights and squires ; clergy ; the middle and trading classes both of town and country ; the manual workers. We may glance at such tokens as there are of these five classes, putting them under four headings, A, B, C, D.

A. BARONIAL. This list is a hurriedly made out one, and I dare say that there are many whom I have overlooked and who have as much right to be included as those that follow.*

ARGENTIN. Two of this name will be found at p. 28, 140. The last baron de Argentein had died in 1307, just twenty years before the date of this tax. He followed Simon de Montfort, and his lands were forfeited.

BADLESMERE. At p. 170 we have Domina de Badlesmere. I presume she was the widow of Sir Bartholomew de B., a baron of Parliament, who had been executed for high treason in 1322. Sir Giles de B., his son and heir, got the attainder reversed in 1328 and recovered the lands. He died s. p. in 1338, and the barony is still now (1906) in abeyance between the heirs of his sisters.

BOTETOURT. We have two ladies of this family, Johanna and Matilda, at p. 32, 208. Baron John de B. had died in 1324, leaving as his heir his grandson John, a minor. The present baron de B. is his descendant, the duke of Beaufort.

DE BURGH. At p. 204, 214, we have a large payer in Domina de Burgh. Probably she was the widow of Richard de Burgh, Earl of Ulster and Connaught, a powerful Anglo-Irish baron who had spent his life in fighting the native Irish and had died in 1326. There are others of the name in my index, some of whom had nothing to do with this family, but took their name from Burgh in Suffolk.

DE GREY. At p. 149(2), 167, 213(2), we find Alicia de Grey. This is probably Alice de Insula, who married John de Grey, baron Grey of Codnor. He was a distinguished soldier in the wars of Edward III, and died at a very great age in 1392. At Cavendish, where Alice is charged, Philip de Insula is also charged, and Robert de Insula at Nedging, p. 148, 160.

HASTINGS. At p. 131, 209, 211, we find Isabella de Hastings. This must be Isabella, daughter of the elder Hugh le Despencer who was beheaded in 1326. She was the second wife of John, Lord Hastings, one of the claimants to the throne of Scotland, who died in 1313, after which she married secondly Ralph de Monthermer.

INGHAM. At p. 119 we find Domina de Ingham. I take this to be Elizabeth, daughter of Lord Zouch and wife of Oliver de Ingham, baron Ingham. He died in 1344. The name is from Ingham in Norfolk, not Suffolk.

EARL OF KENT. We find him at p. 156, 157. This is Edmund Plantagenet of Woodstock, younger son of king Edward I. He was created Earl of Kent in 1321, attainted and beheaded in 1330.

LOVAINE. At p. 175, under Drinkstone, we find Thomas de Lovaine. This must be Thomas, son and heir of Mathew de Lovaine. Mathew, a doubtful baron, according to Sir H. Nicolas, died in 1301, and Thomas was never summoned to Parliament.

MONTCHENESI or MUNCHENSI. At p. 137, 150(2), will be found three members of a branch of this family, paying very small sums. The last baron, William de M., had been killed in battle fighting against the Welsh in 1289, leaving an only child, Dionysia, who married Hugh de Vere, a younger son of the Earl of Oxford.

MORTIMER. Two or three persons will be found in the index under Mortimer and Mortuo mare, probably connected with one or other of the barons de Mortimer.

EARL OF NORFOLK. Thomas de Brotherton, son of king Edward I; born 1300, died 1338. He was created Earl Marshall in 1316, and it is only under that title that he comes into this schedule. See Comes Marescallus in my index.

EARL OF OXFORD. He will be found at Lavenham p. 145, and at Aldham p. 162. See also under Vere. This would be Robert de Vere, sixth earl, who died in 1331. The long succession of the earls of Oxford will be found in the Denham volume of this series.

PEMBROKE. At Ixning, p. 102, which then included Newmarket, will be found the Countess of Pembroke. This must be the foundress of Pembroke College at Cambridge. She was Mary of Chatillon, daughter of Guy, Count of St. Pol, and she was the third wife of Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, who had died in 1324. Two of the de Valence family will also be found in my index.

ST. PHILIBERT. At Chelsworth p. 158 and Lackford p. 169 will be found John de Sancto Philberto. This must be he whose father Hugh and whose son John were both summoned to Parliament as barons. Apparently he himself was not. But he represented Berkshire in 1327.

DE UFFORD. At p. 41, 111, 116, will be found Robert de Ufford. This very distinguished man was summoned to Parliament as a baron in 1332, and created Earl of Suffolk in 1337. Eva de Ufford at p. 107 must be Eve, daughter of John de Clavinger, and wife of Ralph(?) de Ufford, who was uncle to the above Robert.

DE VALOINES. Robert de Valoines, a baron of Parliament, died in 1281, leaving two daughters as his heirs; viz. Roesia who married Sir Edmund de Pakenham, and Cicely who married Robert de Ufford, afterwards Earl of Suffolk. Both these husbands will be found in my index.

B. KNIGHTS AND SQUIRES. Of the next class, which includes all the smaller lords of manors, I shall not attempt to make any list. They will be seen one or more in each township, and can generally be detected by their territorial, or rather local names, by their position in the list, and by the sort of sum they have to pay. Neither is it the business of this preface to deal with individuals and hunt out any eminent men there may be among the eleven thousand. I have only to consider them in a lump. But I may just mention one or two names.

DRURY. Under Thurston at p. 174 we see a Roger Drury paying the very modest sum of nine pence, almost the lowest sum possible. Apparently he must belong to a family which in a little while was to put out many branches, and be lords of many manors, and send forth many eminent men, but which at this time had not yet emerged from obscurity. If so, the early history of that family must be re-written and the rubbish knocked out.

JERMYN. One of this name will be found under Rushbrook, p. 179, and there the name remained till it died out in 1703.

HERVEY DE STANTON. He founded St. Michael's house at Cambridge, which is now merged in Trinity College, and his name is still gratefully mentioned in the grace used in hall. He is said to have died at York in October 1327, in which case he should not come into this assessment. But possibly his death occurring so very shortly before it was made they had not time to find out whose names were to be substituted for his. A drawing of his seal from the original at Trinity College was engraved for Lord Arthur Hervey's History of the Hervey family, 1858. But the fact of his bearing the christian name of Hervey is no evidence at all that he was connected with any family of that name, nor is there any other evidence of it. He left no descendants, and, if he had, probably they would have been Stantons and not Herveys. I have put him in the index under Stanton.

His heir was his nephew, Alexander de Walsham, who is indexed under Walsham.

VISDELOO. This name gives us a portrait, though not in oils. From it we know what the grim man was like in countenance who first bore it. It is probably a more faithful portrait than many of the Lelys and Knellers at which we gaze, and Mr. Farrer might well include it in his forthcoming list of Suffolk portraits.

But I mention the name of the family here because it gives us a good instance of an estate continuing long without ever coming into the market or passing otherwise than by inheritance. The very first name in this volume is that of William Vysdelu, p. 1. He comes under Shotley, which was then called Kirkton, afterwards Kirkton alias Shotley, and at last settled down into Shotley, probably to prevent confusion with another Kirkton in the county. Now if the subjects of Edward VII were to grant him a twentieth as the subjects of Edward III did, and if a list were to be made out for 1906 exactly corresponding to this list for 1327, merely bringing the names of owners up to date, then the name of Lord Bristol would go down where that of William Visdeloo is now. The estate has passed from the one to the other by no other process but inheritance. This William Visdeloo had a son Thomas, who had a son Thomas, all of Shotley. The second Thomas had a daughter and heiress Margery, who married Thomas Mosell. The Mosells had a daughter and heiress who married John Chapman alias Felton. The estate continued with the Feltons till John Hervey, first Earl of Bristol, married the Felton heiress, whence it has come to its present owner. So it trips down a period of six hundred years, as lightly and easily as a child trips down a flight of six steps.

DE WEYLAND. Some of this family will be found in the index. Thomas de Weyland, the rapacious judge, had forfeited his estates and been exiled in 1290. But as he had managed to settle some of them on his wife and son, so the name comes in.

C. CLERGY. The question of the taxation of the clergy is complicated and I shall shirk it. But two things are clear: (1) that the whole wealth of the church does not come into this assessment; (2) that some part of it does. I shall shirk the question as to what part does and what part does not, and merely point out what clergy can be seen.

The abbot of Bury, who at this time was Richard de Draughton, does not come in at all, nor the abbey as far as I can see. Yates tells us that in A.D. 1291, 1298, and in other previous years, when a grant was made to the king, the abbot and convent compounded. I don't know whether they did so in 1327, and whether that is the reason why they do not appear in this assessment.

Or another possible reason occurs to me: It was in the autumn of this very year, 1327, that the town and neighbourhood of Bury made their terrific onslaught on the abbey, carrying off all the valuable goods that they could move, and destroying what they could not. Was the abbot and convent exempted from paying the tax in consequence?

The Bishop of Norwich comes in under one township, p. 17.

There are eight priors and one prioress, who come each under one township only, and (excepting Mendham) not in that township where the priory was.

Prior of Bricet 156.	Prior of Eye 52.	Prior of Norwich 100.
— Butley 222.	— Ipswich 4.	— Wangford 66.
— Dunmow 214.	— Mendham 54.	Prioress of Thetford 209.

There is the master of the Hospital of Batisford, p. 17, 20, a hospital of the Knights of St. John.

There are seventy-two capellani, i.e. chaplains or chantry priests who had nothing to do with the parochial clergy. Twenty-eight of these have only got a christian name, and so I have indexed them under Capellanus. The other forty-four are indexed under their surnames or descriptions. I give their names and pages here, as there is no way of finding them in the index.

Simon de Burnavile	176	Thomas de Littlemor	190	William de Wode	113
Reginald Burstard	53	William Lolt	23

How many of the parochial clergy are here I cannot say. There are nine who are described as parson or rector of a church; viz. at—

Bentley p. 6.	Heringswell p. 201.	Reydon p. 2, 19.
Brampton p. 23.	Hinderclay p. 26.	Wangford p. 197.
Capel p. 9.	Icklingham p. 201.	Wilby p. 54.

There are fifty-five who are called clericus and twenty-eight le clerk, who may or may not be of the parochial clergy; these having no surname are indexed under clericus and clerk respectively. One of the clerks is Alice. Possibly that is a misreading of an abbreviated Alexander.

The rest of the parochial clergy, if they are in the list, are not described so that one can recognize them. Certainly I know of one such, viz. John Tillot, rector of Gedding, p. 177. There is nothing to show he was rector, but I happen to know that he was. And so for all one knows they may be all there.

D. Now we come to the next class, or rather heading, as it includes more than one class; merchants, tradesmen large and small, yeomen, labourers, and anybody else who has not come under A, B or C. We can tell them by their names and by the sort of sums they pay. It is mainly through their names that we can see them, because those names, many of them, have not yet lost their original descriptive character. Now and then one may bear the name of his native village, but as a rule their names are not local. Their names may show (a) the situation of their house; (b) their occupation; (c) some nickname which may have been given them; (d) their patronymic. I will gather together a few instances of each, confining myself mainly to those names which have the preposition or article before them, and which therefore are less speculative than those where the preposition or article has slipped out.

It will be seen that three languages are used. To give two instances out of many: We have the English atte, the Latin ad, the Norman French del or de le: We have the English smith, the Latin faber, the N. French fevre. Who or what it was that settled in which of these three languages a man's name or description should be written, I cant say. Perhaps the nationality of the man named had something to do with it; if of Saxon lineage his name might be written in English; if a Norman or Frenchman, in Norman French; for Saxons and Normans were hardly yet welded into one. Perhaps the scholarship of the local men who made out the original lists had something to do with it; if a good clerk, he might like to show off his Latin. At any rate whatever the reason may be, there are the languages three, one man in one language, another in another.

a. These are objects, natural or artificial, near which a man lived and from which he got a description which in course of time settled down into an hereditary surname. These objects can be detected, if in no other way, by their having a preposition and article before them in one language or another, viz. ad, atte, in the, de le, del or dil. I give them in alphabetical order. In looking for any particular object it must be remembered to look for it in Latin or French as well as English; e.g. cherch and ecclesia, atte cross and ad crucem, atte water and ad aquam, atte clyf and de la falaise, etc. I leave out the preposition for brevity sake. This list does not pretend to be complete.

d. Patronymics. These are names or descriptions compounded of the father or mother's christian name and the word filius, fitz or son, according to whether Latin, Norman or English be the language made use of. Sometimes filius is expressed, sometimes it is to be understood. When it is expressed I have indexed the name under filius. Four columns of entries will be found under filius. Sometimes it is not expressed, and you merely have John Abraham, John Aaron, John Agathe, Richard Basilie, Margery Cecile, Thomas Effemme (i.e. Eufemie), Reginald Marie, and scores of others. In all such cases the second christian name is in the genitive, filius or filia being understood, and it is the name of father or mother, under which the person will be indexed. In the case of Persone, it also is in the genitive case, and in all the names indexed under it filius must be understood. Curiously there are very few names compounded with fitz, in fact only two; viz. Fitz Osbern, and the rather profane name Fitzdeu, which perhaps should be Fitzden. Compounded with son you have such names as Sarresone, Maggessone, Betissone, Levissonne. You also have Prestessone, Revessone, Smethissone. Sometimes the relationship is nepos or neve, and uxor.

SECTION V. NOTES AND QUERIES.

Anyone who has observed what vowels change into what as time runs on will be able to recognize in the lists just given under a, b and c many words which are in use to day with a slightly different spelling. Others which are obsolete, or whose form is much changed, can be made out with the help of a dictionary such as Mr. Stratman's or, best of all, that great historical dictionary which is now in progress. It is therefore tempting to go through the lists word by word, (for though names they are all words,) and give such an explanation of them as the authorities will allow. But that temptation must be resisted, as it is no part of the duty of this preface to do anything of the kind. But I may just put in a few notes and queries which have occurred to me in passing the names through the press.

1. First a word as to the original rolls. They are in the Record Office in Fetter Lane, and their reference is Lay Subsidies, Suffolk, $\frac{139}{6}$. They are certainly entitled to be called original, because they are the identical rolls that the two Suffolk knights, Sir John de Whelnetham and Sir John de Tendring, brought up to the Exchequer with their own hands on May 5, 1329. But though original we must remember that they are a copy of the original returns, and that this original copyist made his mistakes like the rest of us. He certainly bungled some of the names, and he sometimes wrote de instead of le and le instead of de. The rolls are beautifully written and are in excellent preservation. But the letters are very small and crowded, and though you can see them it is not always easy to say what is meant. I can hardly hope not to have added to some of the errors made by the original copyist. But at any rate the figures are accurate, as in nearly every township they agree with the total.

I may mention a few peculiarities which I have noticed. (a) y is always dotted, but i never. (b) u is always used for v, and it is perfectly impossible to distinguish it from n. This makes many names doubtful. (c) c and t are not always distinguishable, and th is often written for t; e.g. crofth, tofth. (d) Sc is often written for s, e.g. Schepherd, sclinger. (e) In the case of those syllables which later centuries wrote er and ar indifferently, here we always have er; e.g. Hervey (never Harvey), Fermer, Ferthing, Berdwell. (f) The final e is often sounded, e.g. Chevele, Badele, fertre. (g) There is sometimes a transposition of letters, e.g. Berd and Bryd, Sorchawe and Corshawe, Socling and Scoling, Thonri and Thorni, Assington and Assignton.

(h) There are a good many syllables abbreviated. These I have always expanded when I knew what the mark of abbreviation meant. It seems to me almost criminal to print manuscripts with all their marks of abbreviation, unless there is any doubt as to what they mean. Most people look upon abbreviations as being one of the many inventions of the evil one. But apparently the Suffolk Arch. Institute do not, as they have just sent out a circular to all the clergy in the county asking for a return of tombstone inscriptions, and imploring and entreating them to use abbreviations !!! There is a mark of abbreviation often used at the end of a syllable something like a z in form. This I have represented by z, as it seemed to be a syllable with a zeddy sound about it.

(i) There are signs of uncertainty about the use of h; e.g. Aliok and Haliok, Archibald and Herchibald, old and hold.

(j) There are signs of that breathing before beginning certain words, which has the effect of making them begin with many a w and h; e.g. Wahagh and Wroh. Possibly Euerolf and Horolf have only been produced by that way of saying Rolf. I recollect going to a village inn in Somersetshire and asking if my horse had had any corn. Yes, said the ostler, I gave it some whuts (oats). And before he brought out the last three letters of whuts, he whistled and breathed and blew for about ten minutes. Wh repeated twenty times on paper would scarcely represent the sound he made.

(k) I have already said that three languages are used, sometimes one, sometimes another, to name a man. One would like to know who or what decided which of the three should be used. Take the case of Smith. There are about 40 under le Smith, or Smyth as it always is; about 140 under Faber; perhaps 9 under le fevre.

(l) The article le, or the preposition ad, atte, de, are sometimes expressed, sometimes not. I dont know whether anything can be inferred from this, but I have fancied that I have seen signs of its being given to the head of the family and dropped in the case of the others.

(m) That surnames are at this time in a transitional state is quite clear, even if one did not look beyond this list. It is quite clear that the names of many people simply describe them or their occupation, and the description still holds good. But it is also clear that the description contained in some of the descriptive names no longer holds good; it has become an hereditary surname, it is borne though it no longer describes, and another description that describes truly has to be tacked on: e.g. John Faber carnifex p. 136; John Prentice textor p. 137; John le Webbe cissor p. 145; Benedict Beyw bocher p. 145; Walter Drabbe mercator p. 204; John Smerch tannator p. 215; Walter de Rysby carnifex p. 215.

2. Nicknames. It is curious to notice some of the appropriate nicknames among the fishermen. At Kessingland, p. 92, are Robert Fair Weder and Richard West Wynd. At Orford, p. 222, is Alexander Stark Weder. At Dennington, p. 53, which is inland, we have William Skoneweder. Any young lady still in the school room and learning German will know the meaning of this last.

A good many nicknames refer to a man's head, or heved as it was written at this time. Besides plain Heved there are Balheved, Borheved, Brodheved, Brokesheved, Craskeded, Erlesheved, Fairheved, Hardheved, Ormesheved, Redheved, Rougheved, Windheved. But Brokesheved may apply to a brook and Ormesheved may be a place. Crask without the head is still a common name in Suffolk.

Some nicknames go for the beard, e.g. Garleberd, Guthelberd, Redberd. Garle is speckled, but what is guthel? Also Robert cum barba.

Facebrown reminds one of the nickname Wryneck given by the Boers to the English. This name is still found in Suffolk in the Hearth Tax volume, and not far from where it is in 1327. Cakebred, Whetelof, Whytbred are I suppose nicknames, but of another sort. The township of Hadley supplies John le Devyle, p. 154, who may have consoled himself, if he felt the need of consolation, with the recollection that the father of William the Conqueror had the same name given to him.

We have Boy and Mikelboy. Boys dont pay taxes, so boy in these names may be the equivalent of knave. We also have Cordeboef and Wildboef. If, as some think, our word boy is the same as the Dutch boef, then we have here two more boys. Otherwise boef must be beef in the sense of the living animal.

We have here no Shakespeare, but a certain number of nicknames of what I may call the Shakespeare type; e.g. Draweswherd, Schakelaunce.

Under Coko and Cokok in the index will be found a good many people bearing this variously spelt name. I presume that they are all Cuckoos. I have noticed the name on a modern tombstone in Shotley churchyard. The N.E.D. gives 1240 as the date of the first known example of the use of the word. An earlier date still might be that day on which the cuckoo itself first said, Cuckoo.

Claver, p. 7, 199, which is represented to day by the surname Clover, must be the same as our word clever, and possibly shows a Dane or two amongst us. See Prof. Skeat in N. & Q. Ser. 10. vol. vi. p. 25.

Qweynte, p. 181, 182, must be the word quaint, also found in ac-quaint, and is represented in Suffolk to day by Quant.

It will be seen in the index how very numerous were the Barkers, Bercars, and Berchers. There are about 120 of them. I presume they bear witness to the number of sheep in the county, and not to the number of trees that had to be barked. There are also six Bercators whatever they may be. Perhaps they barked the trees.

There are a good many names from animals, including the goose. The name Sparke is said to be a contraction of Sparhawke or Sparrow hawk. In this list there are seven Sparhawkes, of whom one was called Outlaw, and only three Sparkes. Hunt is a hound; but what sort of a hound is Onhound?

Other curious nicknames are Dolitel, Evil herring, Old herring, Christmas, Quaresme, Paternoster, Halfpeny, Halfplow, Terdepeny, Proudman, Proudfof, New husband, and many others of the same class.

3. Names taken from some local object, natural or artificial, are interesting and should be noted by those who know the exact locality in which they occur. There are marlepits and other pits or pets, showing that those enormous pits that one so often sees in Suffolk were not all dug yesterday. I will note a few objects in alphabetical order.

ABEL. This name occurs a few times, and once, p. 29, with the prefix dil, showing that it is an object of some sort near which a man lived. The only object I can find is the abele or white poplar tree. But the N.E.D. gives no instance of the use of this word by an English author before 1681. In the Journals of General Hervey he mentions in 1799 "10 large abeel trees near Great Yeldham church." P. 430.

BALKEPIFTEL. This name is racy of the soil. Pightel is still in use for a small enclosed field, and balk is a ridge. Pightel is spelt Piftel just as daughter is spelt dafter.

Del BERYWEYE. This man at Great Ashfield, p. 182, lived on the road to Bury, and his is nearly the only name that brings in a road that one can recognize.

Dil CAGE. This man will be found at Great Barton, p. 172, where the surname Cage is to be found at this moment. A cage was a lock-up or prison.

De CAMERA. Four with this name will be found, and two with its French equivalent de la Chaumbre. One wonders how a man gets his name from a chamber.

De CHILDHOUSE. Several of this name will be found. If it means an orphanage, it is not strange to find the name in the fishing villages of South Cove and Kessingland.

COK. This name will be found sometimes with the prefix de, sometimes le. Le Cok must be the cook, de Cok must be the same word as we have in haycock, and in many place-names.

De CYMITERIO. This occurs once only, viz., at Worlingham, p. 86.

DONCH, DUNCH. Dates forbid that this nickname can mean a dunce, because Dun Scotus, from whose name the word dunce is derived, only died in 1308, and there had not yet been time for it to take root. But there is an old word dunch meaning deaf, blind. The N.E.D. has no quotation for it earlier than 1574.

FALAISE. See PALEYSSE.

Del FERTRE. This occurs at p. 182. The N.E.D. has no instance of fir-tree before 1382.

Del FLET and de FLETESMUTH are found at Stutton and Erwarton, which shows that the fleet or river alluded to is the Stour.

Del FRYTH. This is rather an obscure word meaning wooded land. P. 9, 56. There is also Frethebord, p. 69, just as we talk of the seaboard. But what is Mortdefreyt at p. 38? Its meaning, whatever that may be, appears to be exactly the same as Mordeboys, a name formerly at Hepworth and still clinging to a lane and a cottage at Ickworth. (See Bury Wills, Camd. Soc.)

De GRENEGRES. This name is still found in Suffolk as Greengrass. It seems so silly to call grass green when there is nothing else that it can be, that it occurs to me that the second syllable may represent the old word grece, meaning steps.

De GRENEWEYE. There are now in Suffolk ways which have never been stoned, and as they are not much used for heavy traffic the grass grows and they are called greenways. Apparently the name is no new one, for at p. 13 we have Alice de Greneweye.

De HALIOK. This name may be of great interest. Two men bearing it will be found at Horham cum Allington, p. 49, 50, and another one at Monks' Bradfield p. 178. Horham is the adjoining parish to Hoxne, and at Hoxne was the oak under which king Edmund was said to be shot. Haliok might perfectly well be holy oak. Did the two men at Horham, or their grandfather, live near the oak at Hoxne, and did they get from it their name de Haliok?

Atte HETHE. A good many of these will be found, or in its latin form de Bruario. I lived for many years in a Somersetshire village, where there was a large tract of land called the Heath. I never heard people pronounce it otherwise than it is spelt here, viz. hethe, rhyming to death.

HOWE is a mound.—KER is a marsh.—LOGGE is the old form of lodge.—Atte NOKE is for atten oke.

At p. 60 the big man at Westleton is Augustine de la PALEYSSE. I thought at first I had got hold of a palace. But in the Parliamentary blue book giving the lists of the members of Parliament Augustine, Robert and John de la Falaise (or Phalaise) will be found, one or other of them, representing Dunwich in nine different Parliaments between 1307 and 1331. This knocks down my palace, and shows that the name de la Falaise is the French equivalent of atte clyf, which will also be found. I presume that la falaise or the cliff, on which they dwelt and from which they took their name, now lies low beneath the encroaching sea. The name represents a bit of England that has been pounded into sand and carried away goodness knows where.

In John de PARESTENEY, a small man at Wiston, p. 154, who only pays 7½d., have we got an ancient crusader who has come down in the world? The change of l into r is I believe a perfectly regular one, and so he may be John of Palestine. I will not suggest that Nicholas de Gerico at Gislingham, p. 27, was a companion.

PERTRE, PIRIE and PEREIS must all be pear trees.

The word PLACE as an address, if I may so express it, is rather a difficult word. In John atte Place at Sudbury, p. 139, we have an early instance of it.

De PLANCH is found at Thurston, p. 174. There is still to day in Thurston a site known as Planch Green, though the green is gone.

SALE is the hall.—SCHAW is a wood.—SLOW is slough.

It is interesting to find John de SPINA at Shimpling, p. 142. It may be the very spina which gave a name to Shimplingthorn. Two of the name in its English dress, atte THORN, will be found suitably enough at Thorney or Stowmarket, p. 40.

Under STONE and STONES and the equivalent PETRA will be found a name or two. One sometimes sees in a village an enormous stone, which must have been brought there from some distance, and therefore for some important object. There is one on Hartest green, and another by the wayside between Whepstead and Rede. One wonders who put them there, when and why. It would be interesting if the stones or petra at p. 1, 151, 155, could be found and identified.

I dont know what de STOURE may be in Plomesgate hundred, but atte STOURE at Cornard, p. 149, is evidently the Stour which has just left Sudbury. We have already seen it towards its mouth under FLET.

At Wherstead, p. 4, we see two men called del STRONDE. They must have lived at the very spot still called "the strand," where the road from Ipswich to Shotley runs for a few hundred yards by the side of and level with the Orwell.

Several persons called del WADE will be found, as also the equivalent atte Ford or Forth. Among them is Richard del Wade at Bury St. Edmunds, p. 217. I imagine that his wade or ford might be the one which must have been called Stamford, for the bridge which has succeeded it is now called Stamford bridge. It is outside the west gate. It crosses the Linnet which has come from Ickworth. It does not always bring down a great volume of water, and I have heard a libellous rhyme about the Linnet with nothing in it. It sometimes has a great deal in it. The river that crosses Eastgate street must have had a bridge, but this one beyond the West gate may have been satisfied with a ford.

Atte WEN, p. 151, represents some object I know not what. WENN is, or was not long ago a Suffolk surname.

Several persons will be found called del WENT, a road, an interesting name as throwing light on old roads.

4. Of names showing a trade or office I will only note a very few. These of course have the prefix le.

ACATOUR, a purchaser of goods, is also found in its beheaded form Catour. The name Cater is not uncommon in Suffolk to day.

There is CARETTER and CARTER. These may be the same, as carette is an old form of cart. Also of chart.

EUER MAKER. Two of these will be found at Leiston, p. 61. It would be curious if excavations there should discover the remains of a pottery. But I am bound to say that it was not certain whether the name should not be read EUERWAKER. In which case, instead of two makers of ewers, we must imagine two unfortunate persons suffering from insomnia.

GUNNOUR. GYNIOR. We have four gunners or engineers, including a lady, which shows that the name has become an hereditary surname, and does not necessarily describe the person who bears it.

NETESHERD. At Bardwell, p. 190, we have this name with the prefix de. One may assume this to be an original error for le. This netesherd must have had many beasts, as he is charged for the large sum of sixteen shillings.

ORGANISTRE. Only one organist is in the list, and he is to be found at Bury St. Edmunds, p. 215. Was he an official of the Abbey?

SMEREMONGER. I take these to be dealers in ointments. There is also Smerewakel whatever that may mean.

In such names as Rascald, Messenger, Upholder, Vinter, and many others we have the old forms of the words which are well known to those who study the language in its early writers.

SECTION VI. FINAL.

It is clear that with 11000 persons to draw upon, and with so many points of interest about them and their names, historical, genealogical, topographical and linguistic, the notes and queries of the preceding section might be indefinitely extended. A good deal also might be said about the townships, some of which, not all, are parishes and villages to day. I think they are all called villata excepting Leiston, p. 60, which is called saka.

At p. 40 I have identified Thorneye as Stowmarket, and Stowe at p. 42 as Stow Upland. I should have done better not to have committed myself, as I am not sure whether I am right. At some time between the Conquest and 1300 what had been called Thorney got to be called Stowmarket, but the name Stowmarket does not occur in this list. It must be either Thorney or Stow.

A list of persons whose names were got from places across the sea would have been interesting, and would have helped to show who we are and whence we come.

It would also have been interesting, if one had a complete list of all the farm-houses or lands which to day are called after the name of some medieval owner, to see how many of those owners are to be found in this list living on the spot where still their home keeps alive the memory of their name. To give one instance of what I mean. Under Boxtead, p. 142, will be found a yeoman named Peter Troket. In the Journals of the ubiquitous General Hervey, he mentions on March 31, 1785, riding through Boxtead and past Trucket's hall farm. And on making inquiries I find that Trucket's hall in Boxtead still keeps its name. So that honest Peter though dead still speaketh. There must be many more instances of the same thing.

I have made a list of all the Christian names that occur in this volume, with the number of times that each occurs in East and West Suffolk respectively. This list will be found at p. 308. Note the enormous preponderance of John over all other names. The vile plan of abbreviating makes it difficult to distinguish between Constance and Constantine.

In a review of No. xiv. of this series which appeared in the Athenæum for Sept. 15th, 1906, the writer speaks of the series as "due to local industry." It is horrible to mix up historical and personal matters, but I really must be allowed to say that I am not a locality, and that any industry that there may be in the matter is no more local than it is national or (that blessed word) imperial.

*Bury St. Edmunds,
November, 1906.*

POSTSCRIPT. A BURY MOB IN 1327.

At page xvi I have suggested that the onslaught on Bury abbey made by the town and neighbourhood in 1327, and the great destruction of its property then wrought, may have been the reason why neither abbey nor abbot appears in this list of payers of the subsidy. Very likely it was not the reason. But at any rate the mischief was done, and in November, 1327, three commissions were granted by the king and council to certain persons to hear the complaint of the abbot.

He complained that a great multitude of persons besieged the abbey, fired, burnt and broke the gates, assaulted his servants, imprisoned him and the monks, broke open chests and coffers, carried away gold and silver chalices, books, vestments, ornaments, spoons, cups, jewels, money and writings, fished the abbey ponds, felled the trees, cut the grass, destroyed many of his houses in Bury, Nowton, Horringer, Westley, Barton, Risby, Ingham, the Fornhams, Pakenham, Rougham, Cockfield, Bradfield and Whepstead, and carried away 100 horses, 120 oxen, 200 cows, 300 bullocks, 10,000 sheep and 300 swine. They also carried the prior and several monks into a house in the town, and thence to the chapter house, and compelled them to seal a document stating that the abbey and convent owed them £10,000.

These persons, 155 in number, are named as being amongst the great multitude who did all this damage. I take their names from the printed calendar to the Patent Rolls. It will be noticed how many of the clergy are charged with being in it, including the parsons of Barrow, Bradfield, Hartest and Little Whel-netham, twenty chaplains or chantry priests, and several clerks. As the year of this riot is the very year of this subsidy, and as many of the rioters will be found in the subsidy list, I give their names here.

No. 3. LIST OF CHRISTIAN NAMES.

I give here a list of all the Christian names that occur with the number of times that they occur in East and West Suffolk respectively. Some allowance must be made for possible misreading of abbreviated names. The same man is entered sometimes under more than one villata, so that every name does not represent a different person. The enormous preponderance of Johns over every other name will be noted. Some of the Georges are probably Gregories, as those two names were often confused in writing. Stacy is probably a shortened form of Anastacius. Egidia is possibly a misreading of Egidio, in which case it is merely Giles.
